THE CLERGYMAN'S ELOQUENCE may have been at fault, still he felt annoyed to find that an old gentleman fell asleep during the sermon on two consecutive Sundays. After the service on the second week, he told the boy who accompanied the sleeper that he wished to speak to him in the vestry. There he learned that the sleeper was the boy's grandfather. "Well," said the clergyman, "if you will only keep your grandfather awake during my sermon, I'll give you a nickel each week." The deal was made, and for the next two weeks, Grandfather stayed awake through the sermons, but on the third week, he slept soundly through. The vexed clergyman sent for the boy and said, "I am very angry with you. Your grandfather was asleep again today. Didn't I promise you a nickel a week to keep him awake?" "Yes," replied the boy, "but Grandpa now gives me a dime not to disturb him."
