MUSIC NOTES – The hymn I vow to thee, my country has an interesting history. The text was written by Sir Cecil Spring who was a British diplomat. The text was first written around 1908 and revised in 1918 after Rice had been posted as ambassador to the USA. The text circulated privately for a few years in England and in 1921 a British music publisher asked Gustav Holst, who was well known as the composer of the orchestral suite The planets, to set the text to music. At the time of this request, Holst was apparently overwhelmed with other work and, according to his daughter's account, he was delighted to find that the theme he used for the planet Jupiter in his orchestra piece would work for setting this text. The new hymn was probably first used in 1921 and was first published as a hymn in 1926. The text describes the loyalty that one owes to one's homeland as well as to the heavenly kingdom.

A GOSPEL MEDITATION

Distress and Faith: A Woman's Journey

- Macrina Wiederkehr

Once there was a wound
It was no ordinary wound
It was my wound
We had lived together long.

I yearned to be free of this wound
I wanted the bleeding to stop
Yet if the truth be known
I felt a strange kind of gratitude for this wound.
It made me
tremendously open to grace vulnerable to God's mercy.

A beautiful believing within me that I have named Faith kept growing, daring me to reach for what I could not see.
This wound had made me open.
I was ready for grace
And so one day, I reached.

There I was thick in the crowd bleeding and believing
and I reached.
At first I reached for what I could see the fringe of a garment,
But my reaching didn't stop there for Someone reached back into me.
A grace I couldn't see flowed through me.
A power I didn't understand began to fill the depths of me.

Trembling I was called forth to claim my wholeness.
The bleeding had left me.
The believing remained
And strange as this may sound
I have never lost my gratitude for the wound
that made me so open to grace.
